15. The United States dropped atomic bombs on Nagasaki and Hiroshima to force Japan to surrender.

Section F: Data-based Questions

1. ED31004

A. A lot of men were recruited into the armed forces when the First World War broke out in 1914. It led to a shortage of labor and women were needed to fill the job vacancies.

B.

✓ Men returned to work after the First World War.

Women were tired of working.

✓ There were fewer employment opportunities after the First World War.

Many women joined the armed forces.

2. ED31005

A. It refers to the signing of the Treaty of Versailles at the Paris Peace Conference. It took place in June 1919.

B. The United States, Britain and France dominated the Paris Peace Conference.

C. Germany. They believed that Germany should take responsibility for starting the First World War.

3. ED31006

A. It refers to the Paris Peace Conference, which was held in 1919.

B. It refers to the Treaty of Versailles (1919). Germany had to pay the bill.

C. Germany had to return Alsace -Lorraine to France, accept the War-guilt Clause, carry out disarmaments and give up 13% of its territory and all colonies. (any two of them)

4. ED31008

A. 'This government' refers to the Weimar Republic. It was formed in 1918 and represented Germany at the Paris Peace Conference.

B. It refers to the Treaty of Versailles. The Germans believed that the treaty was unfair and harsh because they thought that Germany should not hold sole responsibility for the First World War.

5. ED31009

✓ The currency of Germany had devalued greatly.

✓ Germany had to pay a large indemnity.

✓ The German government was unpopular.

✓ Germany lost some territories.

Germany became a strong nation after the First World War.

✓ Germany was invaded by foreign nations.

6. ED31010

A. Anti-Jewish policy.

B. Hitler believed that the Jews had damaged the economy of Germany and they had done something in secret to cause Germany's defeat in the First World War.

7. ED31011

The United States was in depression.

✓ The United States became more powerful than Britain and France.

✓ The United States became a prosperous nation.

✓ The stock market of the United States boomed.

The Americans did not invest their wealth in the stock market.

8. ED31012

A. The Great Depression

B. It was caused by over-crediting and over-speculation in the stock market of the United States.

C. Because they were very poor. It was very common during the Great Depression because a lot of people had lost their wealth and jobs.

9. ED31013

A. It refers to the League of Nations. Wilson was the designer of the bridge.

B. The bridge is not safe because it lacks a keystone.

C.

✓ The League of Nations was a failure because it did not have the support of the United States.

Although it did not have the support of the United States, the League of Nations succeeded in maintaining world peace.

✓ The United States was unwilling to take part in international affairs.

✓ Britain, Italy, France and Belgium were major members of the League of Nations.

10. ED31014

A. 'He' refers to the British Prime Minister, Chamberlain. Chamberlain believed that Britain had not recovered from the Great Depression. Besides, his countrymen would not support the use of military forces to enforce the Treaty of Versailles.

B. Chamberlain adopted the policy of appeasement towards Germany. His policy was not successful because it encouraged the aggression of Germany and Italy. In fact, it was one of the causes of the Second World War.

11. ED31015

A. It refers to the Pearl Harbour Incident (1941). Japan started a sudden attack on the American naval base in 1941.

B. The United States changed its policy of neutrality and declared war on Japan after the Pearl Harbour Incident.

C. Japan regarded the American naval base as an obstacle to its expansion in Asia. Japan had to destroy the American naval base in order to achieve this goal.

13. ED31030

A. The Paris Peace Conference.

B. A: Italy, B: The United States, C: France, D: Britain.

C. No.

The scales on Wilson's hand represented justice, but this scales was tilted up because of money.

This implied that he was not able to handle international dispute fairly. Lloyd George chained the territories of his country, and did not open it to the others. This violated the principle of freedom.

Clemenceau was portrayed as a ferocious tiger, which had no humanity at all. Orlando was fishing and this implied that his country invaded small countries. This action was full of selfishness.

D.

☐ It was not fair: Defeated countries were not allowed to participate in the Paris Peace Conference.

☐ It was not selfless: All nations paid attention to their own self-interests, regardless defeated countries' ability to afford the reparation.

□ It was not humane: France insisted on weakening Germany permanently by severely punishing it through the Paris Peace Conference.

□ It was not liberal: Britain followed protectionism in the post-war period and this created barriers to international free trade. (4 points)

E. Disagree

The importance of the Paris Peace Conference: The Paris Peace Conference drew up peace treaties with the defeated powers (such as the Treaty of Versailles with Germany) , re-established new orders in Europe , and issued the Fourteen Points after discussion and negotiation of different nations.

Other causes of the Second World War: Post-war economic problems (such as the Great Depression of 1929) were serious; democratic governments failed and therefore were not able to solve the post-war problems; Britain, France and the League of Nations failed to stop the aggression of Italy and Germany (appeasement policy); people believed in the doctrine of Social Darwinism.

Or:

Agree.

The failure of the Paris Peace Conference: The Fourteen Points failed to achieve the desired goals (i.e. the League of Nations) . Leading nations in the conference did not consider the opinion of defeated nations, resulting in Germany's hostile feeling against the Treaty of Versailles. Italy dissatisfied with the benefits gained after the war and this led to the rise of totalitarianism. Because of these reasons, world peace could only maintain for about two decades.

14. ED31031

A. (American president) Woodrow Wilson.

B. Germany.

Principle 4: The limitation of armaments was the greatest blow to Germany as Germany used to be a great military power. Disarmament implied that its military power declined seriously and it was difficult for her to revive her national glory.

C. Principle 3: Abolition of barriers to international trade would help the development of import and export trade. OR Principles 7, 8 and 9: According to the principle of Self-determination, emerging countries would no longer rule by a foreign government and could establish their own independent nations.

Principle 11: The development of the League of Nations helped to resolve disputes among nations and prevent war by using means such as economic sanction and taking military actions.

(Any one of the above)

D. It was realised to a certain extent.

Explanation:

Can be realised: Principles 2, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11

Cannot be realised:

◆ Principle 3: Protective tariffs were introduced by different nations to protect their home industries and this hindered international trade development.

◆ Principle 7: German colonies in the Pacific, Asia and Africa were transferred to Japan, Britain or the League of Nations, rather than return to their own people.

◆ Principle 11: Many problems were inherent in the League of Nations and so it failed to perform its function. The league lacked support from great powers (such as the United States); defeated nations could enter in the league only at the later stage. The league also did not have its own army to stop Germany, Italy and Japan from invading other countries. The league was not able to stop its members from withdrawing from the league.

15. ED31032

A. The United States, France, Germany and Britain (from left to right).

B. France.

Explanation:

Clue from Source I: The representative of France, Clemenceau, hold the rope of the guillotine and was prepared to execute Germany while Britain and the United States only watched aside. So France was most hostile towards Germany.

Historical fact: The humiliating defeat of France by Prussia in 1871 and the loss of Alsace and Lorraine produced a strong hostile feeling in France against Germany. France also had to pay a huge indemnity as Germany wanted to weaken France permanently. Later, the chancellor of Germany, Bismarck, started to form alliances with other European countries in order to isolate France and further worsened the relationship between the two nations. After the First World War, France insisted on punishing Germany severely by a harsh Treaty of Versailles, showing that France had the deepest hatred against Germany.

C. Negative attitude.

Explanation: There were only three people in the conference, showing that the peace conference was controlled by Britain, the United States and France. The hands of the defeated Germany were tied up and Germany was being trampled, showing that the treaty was unfair according to the cartoonist's view. / In the cartoon, Britain, France and the United States used guillotine to execute Germany, showing that the treaty was too harsh according to the cartoonist's view. (any one of the above) (2 marks)

D. Prohibiting the conscription and the possession of aircrafts weakened Germany's defense seriously.

In addition, Germany lost a lot of land and people due to the treaty terms of handing over all the colonies and 13% of its territory. The heavy reparation became a great financial burden to Germany.

The 'war-guilt' clause also made German feel humiliated.

E. Free response.

Reference answer:

◆ It is reasonable:

In the pre-war period, Germany continuously expanded its army, established new colonies and extended its territories, causing discontent among the powers. Germany also developed alliance system through diplomatic means and the system finally turned a local dispute into a general war. After the war broke out, Germany's unrestricted submarine warfare dragged the United States into war. Therefore, Germany had to accept the sole responsibility for causing the war. In order to prevent Germany from causing another war, it was reasonable for the powers to reduce Germany's military strength. And it was reasonable for Germany, being a defeated country, to pay reparation to victorious nations to compensate the military expense and reconstruction expenses.

◆ It is not reasonable:

It was not fair for Germany to bear the 'war-guilt' clause as other nations were also responsible for causing the war and Germany should not be solely responsible for causing the war. In addition, the reparation of £6,600 million was far beyond Germany's repayment ability and pushed German economy to the verge of collapse. Reducing German army would also affect adversely its national security. These terms were all unreasonable.

16. ED31033

A. France.

B. Among the three powers, i.e. France, Britain and the United States, only France was not sheltered from the invasion of Germany. Thus, only by weakening Germany could France be safeguarded against German invasion in the future.

C. Germany. From the Source, the boy was naked and was crying behind the pillar, showing that he was upset. The paper representing the Treaty of Versailles was thrown on the floor. Germany was forced to sign the peace treaty with the victorious nations after the First World War. By the treaty, it had to disarm, to pay an indemnity and to give up land. It was very harsh and humiliating to Germany, just like the boy who was stripped off his clothes.

D. Free response. Suggested answer: I do not agree with him. Geographically speaking, France indeed is more vulnerable to German invasion as they are next to each other. However, punishing Germany harshly would only lead to German hatred of France. Their relations would remain intense which could bring troubles in the future. Germany would never forget the humiliation of its defeat and may look for the chance of revenge. Moreover, if Germany was weakened, Europe would lose its balance of power. The burden of maintaining peace in Europe would depend on Britain and France, but the strength of the two countries was weakened after the war. Probably they would have difficulties in preventing aggression.

17. ED31034

A. Source I: The Nazi Party.

Source II: Emblem of militarism / Japanese military flag.

Source III: The Fascist Party.

B. Hitler: Source I (The emblem of Nazi Party).

Mussolini: Source III (The emblem of Fascist Party).

C.

a. There were many political parties within a country to participate in politics. ☐

b. The country was ruled by a Head of State or by one-party dictatorship. ☐

c. People enjoyed the right to privacy. ☐

d. People were fully monitored by the government. ☐

e. The government resolved disputes amicably by diplomatic means. ☐

f. The government used force to resolve external disputes. ☐

g. National interests came first. ☐

h. People's interests came first. ☐

i. The government advocated to bring glory for the state or the race. ☐

D. Hitler and Mussolini advocated the use of force to resolve external disputes, so they used wars to replace moderate diplomacy, and this threatened the security of other countries. For example, Hitler's expansionist policies made Britain and France feel discontent and eventually led to the Second World War in 1939. In addition, using force as a main diplomatic mean naturally led to the enhancement of military strength and stronger weapons. So in the Second World War both Germany and Italy use weapons which were more powerful than those in the First World War. More serious devastation was resulted.

18. ED31035

A. The Treaty of Versailles.

B. He suggested the use of force. In the Source, he said it could only be achieved by 'blood'.

C. Hitler did. Germany sent an army into the Rhineland in 1936. It also annexed Austria and the Sudetenland in 1938 by threatening to go to war. Its empire was enlarged by 1939.

D. Free response. Suggested answer: No. The Treaty of Versailles had made the Germans angry and humiliated, and the Germans were waiting their chance to revenge. The treaty was so harsh that it made Hitler's early aggression look justified. The appeasement policy of Britain and France encouraged war. It made Hitler think that no one dared to stop him, encouraging him to go further. The isolationist policy of the United States also encouraged Hitler's aggression. The League of Nations was too weak to stop aggression of Germany, Italy and Japan. It also failed to achieve disarmament. The Great Depression brought economic problems and thus led to the rise of Nazism in Germany.

19. ED31036

A. To conquer the world. (Hint: Boss of the Universe)

B. The cartoonist felt that the 'leaders of democracy' were cowards. He used the word "spineless", meaning weak and cowardly, to describe them.

C. The two cartoonists did have the same view on the weakness of the great powers. The 'leaders of democracy' in Source I succumbed to Hitler and were trampled by him. In Source II, they were 17 years of lost opportunity saluting Hitler. Both cartoonists gave the message that Hitler was an aggressor, but it was the politicians of France, Britain and the United States who were to blame for not stopping him.

Versailles Treaty

D. Yes. When Hitler carried out rearmament programmes in 1935, Britain and France did nothing to stop him. They also did not stop Hitler from remilitarising the Rhineland in 1936. In 1938, Britain and France allowed Germany to annex Austria and the Sudetenland.

20. ED31037

A. France and Britain.

B. In the cartoon, the two policemen were trying to direct the vehicle with Nazi symbol, representing Germany, to the road to the Soviet Union. The motive of the two countries was to divert Germany's expansion away from Western Europe and towards the Soviet Union so that Western Europe could be kept in peace.

C. Stalin (right) and Hitler (left).

D. Germany and the Soviet Union signed the Nazi -Soviet Non-Aggression Pact in 1939, thus Stalin and Hitler were shown shaking hands together in the cartoon.

E. In the cartoon, the two men representing Germany and the Soviet Union were both hiding a knife behind their back, showing that they regarded each other as enemies though they were shaking hands. Nazism was anti -communist. Hitler signed the Nazi -Soviet Non-Aggression Pact with the Soviet Union to avoid a two -front war. Stalin initially wanted to sign treaties with Britain and France, but failed. Then he turned to Hitler. In 1941, Germany attacked the Soviet Union. By late 1942, the Soviet Union began to counter -attack Germany. The cartoon correctly described their relationship.

21. ED31038

A. The United States.

B. Atomic bombs. It mentions the use of 'bomb' in line 2 of the Source.

C. Yes. To end the war quickly, the United States dropped two atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki in August, 1945.

D. After dropping the bombs, Japan surrendered soon and thus the Second World War ended.

However,

it brought large casualties and great destruction to Japan. The United States thereafter played a leading role in international affairs because it was the only power that possessed the atomic bomb. Besides, atomic bombs caused suspicion and tension between the United States and the Soviet Union. This set off an arms race between the two superpowers.

Section G: International Conflicts – Source-based Questions

1. 3.1 (2)

- A. Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Yugoslavia (any three).
- B. The region would be given to France.
- C. They were discontented with the settlement. In the petition, they said that they desired to remain united with Germany because they were German as regards race, history, language and sentiment.
- D. As reflected in Source I, the First World War greatly changed the political map of Europe. After the war, the three old empires in Eastern Europe — the Russian Empire, the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the German Empire — broke up and a number of nation-states were formed. The Germans resented the changes because many Germans lived in the new nation-states of Eastern Europe. Like the inhabitants in the Saar region in Source II who wanted to remain united with Germany because they were German, the Germans wanted the Germans in Eastern Europe to be re-united with Germany after the war. The situation in Eastern Europe remained unstable after the war.

2. 3.1 (3)

- A. Mars: Germany. Man: Britain.
- B. They were arguing about the Sudetenland in Czechoslovakia. The caption of the cartoon tells that it was about the Munich Conference which was held to discuss the Sudetenland problem.
- C. Yes. The cartoonist showed that the man was facing Mars bravely, looking straight into his eyes though Mars was much stronger than he.
- D. No. In the Munich Conference, Britain adopted an appeasement policy towards the demands of Germany. The Munich Agreement gave the Sudetenland to Germany.

3. 3.1 (4)

- A. In the early 1930s Soviet Russia improved its relations with the Western democracies. It joined the League of Nations and signed a treaty of mutual assistance with France and Czechoslovakia separately. It was because of the rise of the Nazis to power in Germany. The Nazis had a programme of military expansion in Eastern Europe to build a large German empire. In face of German expansion, Soviet Russia hoped that the international community could take collective action against Germany and aimed to form a grand alliance with Britain, France and the countries in Eastern Europe. However, it failed. It therefore improved its relations with Nazi Germany and signed a non-aggression pact with Germany in 1939 for self-defence.
- B. Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union were pretending to be allies only and did not really trust each other. In the cartoon, though Hitler of Germany and Stalin of Soviet Russia were tied at the ankle as in a three-legged race, both were holding a gun behind their back. It shows that though they had signed the Nazi-Soviet Non-aggression Pact promising not to attack each other, both were merely waiting for the chance to attack and destroy the other.
- C. Yes. The cartoon showed that Hitler of Germany and Stalin of the Soviet Union did not really trust each other despite the Nazi-Soviet Non-aggression Pact. In September 1939, the Second World War broke out. Despite the pact, in June 1941 Germany suddenly invaded the Soviet Union.
- D. Yes. Under the Nazi-Soviet Non-Aggression Pact, the two countries agreed not to go to war against each other. As a result, Germany did not have to fear a two-front war against Britain and France on the west and Soviet Russia on the east. By the pact, Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia also secretly agreed to divide Poland. Immediately after the signing of the pact, German troops invaded Poland on 1 September 1939. Britain and France demanded immediate German withdrawal. Without any reply, they declared war on Germany on 3 September and the Second World War broke out.

4. (a) The Allied effort. The poster was issued by the United States, which fought on the Allied side, and it calls on women to take up factory work to help "win" the war. (Accept reasonable explanation.)

(b) Total war is a mode of warfare in which the warring countries control and mobilise all national resources, with military-oriented policies, so that the war is not confined to the front line and the distinction between combatants and non-combatants disappears. Source I reflects this because civilians — here, women — were mobilised into war production in the rear to support the long-lasting war, showing that resources and manpower away from the battlefield were directed towards the war effort. (Also accept: it reflects the rise in women's position, as women entered industrial production.)

(c) Radar — a device using radio waves to detect enemy aircraft and ships; after the war it was used in civilian navigation, weather forecasting and environmental monitoring. The computer ("ENIAC", built in the United States to calculate the paths of shells/missiles); after the war computers were used in administration and business, and later became common in daily life. (One civilian use each is enough.)

(d) Free response. Suggested answer: Agree. The wars caused enormous destruction — they killed more than 80 million people, the First World War cost about USD 330 billion and the Second about USD 1,000 billion in damages, and the use of atomic bombs opened the era of nuclear weapons that still threatens peace. Yet military needs also drove innovations that later benefited civilian life, as Source II shows: radar now aids navigation and weather forecasting, and the computer became central to modern work and daily life. Other wartime technologies — the jet engine (faster, farther air travel), the rocket engine (which opened the space age), penicillin and plastic surgery (medicine), and stainless steel and the zipper (daily tools) — were also turned to peaceful use. Source I further shows social progress: women entering war production raised their social status, and after the wars many countries granted women the vote and greater economic independence. So while the wars were the most destructive in history, they also accelerated technological and social progress. (Accept "Disagree" or a balanced answer of equivalent merit, provided it is supported with reference to the sources and relevant historical facts.)
